From that day to this the struggle for the fishries has been periodically renewed. The treaty of 17k3 guaranteed to American fishermen the right to fish in the gulf of St 1.aw-rence on the Grank Bank, and all other banks and waters of the deep sea it also gave them I berty to fish on certain British coasts and land for drawn and successions. for drying and curring purposes. The United States regarded the question as settled once for all So far from that, it is the only question raised in the course of the negotiations for independence not settled up to the present time and not apparently on the road to settlement save in the way of periodic agreements for halled the way or periodic agreements for incited terms of rears.

It was in 1814 that the fisheries problem came up for the second time. At the close of the war of 1812 treat Britain took the ground that the war had invalidated all the fisheries rights of concentrates, and that these were for her to concede or deny de novo The American com-missioners maintamed that the grants of 1783 were Irrevecable and inalienable Neither part) was disposed to viold has also were irrevecable and inaltenable. Neither party was disposed to yield, but neither cared to prolong a bootless war and so the rival diplomatists quietly dropped the whole matter. It is testy of thent made no mention of its fisheries. Disputes and collisions followed, as a matter of course. An attempt was made to settle thyquestion in 1815, and in 1815 a convention was entered into which has never been attragated, and which will be the only regulation in force respecting the fisheries at the expiration of the temporary agreement of the present season. The musical chimes of St. Pau a stirred the heavy, foggy, snoky morning air of London, and informed is that it was Sunday. If was so different from the continental Sabbath. The streets were as quiet and deserted as the lanes of Pompen and Herculaneum. We want down to the street to breakfast at some reptagrant.
Every shop was closed, heavy shutters barred restaurants and grill rooms, and after a long and fruitless search for some sunful cathers who and fruitless search for some sinful caterer who ould formsh Southdown mutton for hungry bumanity on Sunday forenoon, we returned, in a religious frame of mmd, to the fish and beef steak of our hote! The din and turnique of yes-terday had totally disappeared. No omn bus, scarcely a cab, rolled over the smooth asphalt, and only a few pedestrians stole softly along the broad sidewalks, like ghosts stalking at mid night through the lonely streets of Thebee ondon nots on a very rigid religious 31- on Sun in Sinday observance between Englan I and the continent is very marked. On the continent is very marked. On the continent Sinday is enumently a day of recreation and amissement, open by each one according to his or her tasts and inclination. Some go to church in the foreneon, but the afterneon and evening a universally devoted by old and young to visits and excursions, concerts, theaters, etc. instances of drunkenness are are in England the law and custom enforce strict outward observance, but I saw more drunken people on three Sundays of Indion and Liverpool than I had seen in six months at the continept, with the exception of Kinessa. Travelers generally notice this fact, which to the unbiased moralist and legislator must furnish abundant matter for reflection. Upon apparent external evidence alone the superiority of the English institution can certainly not be claimed.

of the English institution can certainly not be claimed. Two main thoroughfares run from the city to the west end. The one, changing its name at every bend and angle, and including theapside, Newgate, Holborn viaduct, Holborn street, New Oxford street, Andrews and beyond Theother, including Ludgate hil, Fleet street, including Ludgate hil, Fleet street, firmand and Whitehall runs from St. Paul's in a large bend, parallel to the river, to Westmin ster. Oxford and Holborn are perhaps the in si frequentied streets in the city, since the construction of the viaduct, which spans a favine. The viaduct is 1404 feet long and eighty feet wide, and as the line of houses on the side of this street is uninterrupted we become scarcely aware of the fact of crossing a long and wife bridge.

A short d stance beyond the viaduct, an i about one square to the right, is the British museum the most famous offsection in the world. The structure is new, and with its creek portice prethe most famous collection in the world. The structure is new, and with its Greek portice presents a noble aspect. As in the case of so many European public buildings, the effect is marred by the close proximity of dense and plain puriters. The collection consists of an invaluable library, bronze rooms, medieral rooms and ethnographical rooms. The call lections of natural bistory lare recently been transferred to the South Kensing ton nuiseous. The British museum spusify the pride of England. The unstinted supply of private and public wealth, the extensive travels of Englishmen, and the widespread commercial connection and interests of the malion, have emabled the authorities of this institution to supply it with the rarest, meet interesting and most valuable objects of art and science. This collection of sculpture is very large, and arranged chronologically of the highest interest and very instructive is the vast collection of Assyrian antiquities, which had been covered by the annos of the desert for over 2000 years, until Layard, forty years ago, laid bare the foundations of Answell and Sunrod, on the banks of the Tigrus. Here are the undisputed works of a high civilization which flourished on the Kinghates and Tigrus about 1000 years before the commencement of our em. How the scales of prejudice drop from our eyes, how we reverse and modity our early taught and previously-concerved notions of the world a history! of their own. The urbes of Israel we e inferior to their neighbors in sverything pertolining to civilization, but they gave to the world two, and really three, systems of religion, which today are the only trial and aggressive yr stems extent. What great moral instructor are these museums? No thoughtful person, unless steeped in religious projudice and encreated in bias of race and no ton, can walk through these halls alled with the work of six continents pulnfully evolved curing thrity can uries, and not become more tolerant and more humane. IT IS NOT COING BALKWARD Initadelphia Pre s.

No the rearblican party is not going bacaward. His o be judged as a whole and not from a part. Its progress is to be measured by a feries of year, and not by a single year. Here and tree it may look to the moment as it the party where facting to the bear. He as angle state it may for the time being fall under reactionary influences. For a sit gib campaign it may seem to turn back to old methods and old measures. But the republican line stretches across the continent republican linetory spans three decades and republican endency is determined, not by the sagging of the line at a part tillar point, but by the general advance of the broad fourt. The Pennsylvania ruitrond turns to the slight and the left, but its general course is forward. The republican party was far ahead in 1880 of its josition in 1880 it recognizes no evilier of action it has a better graps of bying questions, it is free from old influences and readier for eve demands. In New York it makes Evarts senalar, looks of the first rank for governor, and joins hunds in the broadest and highest platform. In Messachusetts it quickens positive republicanism with fresh ritainty, but makes it progressive as well as angegressive. In this times is appeal to the sober eccount hought of the people. Along this broad sweep there are no signs of reaction. If anywhere the party looks tack ward it is local and temporary.

Republication must in the acture of thinge go forward. It is justly proud of its past, but its like lies in its progress. It can not win by standing still or turning to the rear. It is made up of thisking men who meet new demands and new duties as they come. Beaction may be feet for a time, but the going stopped.

The witty spirits about (regon City, of whom Neomith was not the lead, gaved it the significant name of "Hime Ruin," a name that was original with that time and that especial beverage. The early legislators had passed a stringent prohibitory law, and the people saw that it was actually enforced. Neither Maine, nor Kamsta, sor low have ever begun to enforce prohibition as did the people of Oregon at that early time. Even like Hudson's Bay Co, deaplie the immense profit in the nefarious trade, dared 10 it osell iquor commandy. There were many prominent men on board the Jeannette, men who were to make their mark in the history of their times. There was General Jo Lane, just returned from being a hero in the Mencan war. He was afterwards to be governor of Oregon, our delegate to congress, a senator during the troublons times that preceded the great rebellion and who was to be candidate for vice president on the confederate nomination of lood, when Breckenridge ran for president. There was Jim Nosmith, a young fellow, full of muschlef and allive to all possible humor and freilic. Nesmith, then a roung man with moderate aspirations, a scarcely educated frontiersman, y-t would live to be a senator in congress and to noble duty for his country in time of need. There was Colonel W. W. Chapman, who came bresh from prominent dealings with public affairs in the new state of Iowa. Jo Meek, the modifican man, who was to take his first hassle with the sea, the Montelths, who settled at Albany and have been always prominent. Colonel Ford of Polk county. S. S. BUNTLINE'S WILD DAYS.

Fighting Seven Duels and not Receiving Scratch.

How he Won his Spurs in the Literary Field Barn ing $50,000 a Year with his Pen-Writing a Big Book in Two Days.

New York World. "I suppose hed Bustime has got more bullet holes in him than any other living American," said an admiral in our nary whom I recently met at the Fifth Avenue. "He carries around in his right three a bullet which he received in Virginia, and he has twelve other wounds, in-flicted by swort shell and bullet, seven of which were got in battle. He went into the nary in 1838. Every officer had to fight a duel in those days. Midshipman Ed. Judson, or 'Ned Burt-line,' as the has since been better known, fought-line, a the has since been better known, foughtseven duels when he was 13 with other officers who had affronted him."

I neked if there was not some mistake about the age, and the admiral said "No, Judson was 13. I ought to know, for I was one of the officers who had duels with him."

In answer to further questions, he continued;
"Judson was not educated at any naval or milltary arademy. His father was a Philadelphia lawyer, and insisted on putting Et through a tough course of Latin and Blacksions when he was a mere child. The hoy rebelled. His father flogged him very severely. The boy ran away and went to sea as a cabin-boy when he was II years old, sailing around the Horn. The next years old, sailing around the Horn. The next years old, sailing around the Horn. The next year he enlisted ha a government apprentice on board a man-ot-war. He was large of his age, atrong as a horse and precociona. One day a boat, of which he was cockswain, was run over by a Fulton ferry boat and upset in floating loo. She drifted down to Governor's island, where Judson managed to get ashore with the whole crew. Then he faunted under his injures and was taken back to the Macedonian unconscious. PROMOTED

"The crew were so loud in his praise for rescuing a couple of them that the officers united in a request to have him made a midshipman, and President Van Buren sent on the commisin a request to have him made a midshipman, and President Van Buren sent on the commission within a fortnight. Then we young middles whose appointment was due to 'influence' refused to mess with him because he had been a common salior before the mast. On the way to the full squadron, on the ship-of-war Levant, whereour refusal was made known to him, young Judson challenged thirteen of us na day. Some withdrew their refusal and associated with him, but seven of us fought him one after the other, in Florida, in New Orleans and in Havana. He didn't get a scratch, I believe, and four of us were marked for life. To the satisfaction of everybody in the navy, he established the presumption that he was as good as anybody. Penhaps one ctroumstance that reduced the number of midshipmen that he had to fight was a little exhibition on the way down. The captain, who made a kind of pet of the boy, hung a bottle out on the yardarm, and Judson, at the word of command, broke the bottle with one bullet and cut off the string above it with another. That was the first intimation we had that he was, as he is to-day, one of the half dozen best shots in the United States."

"Was he known at all as 'Ned Buntline,' then?" I asked.

"Oh no, he began to write a couple of years later, and a sketch entitled The Captain's Fig,' which he wrote for the Antichrocker Magazine under that pseudonym, gave him his first noteriety"

PORTLAND, SUNDAY, JULY 25, 1855 TO REST IN CENTRAL PARK

The remains of General Grant are to be in terred in Central park, New York City No place could be more fit. The city of New York is the head of the United States, as other cities and states are its members, and there is no spot so appropriate as the great city for the interment of the man whose name symbolizes the restored of the man whose name symbolizes the restored and permanent unity of the Great Republic and permanent unity of the Great Republic

The life of a great man does not end with himself. It is a germ, a seed, that grows as a spreading tree through many ages (sen Grant embodied the determined purpose of the people of the United States to preserve their nationality units learn. He combined with that purpose and brought to the direction of it his own great in-dividual qualities—multary skill of the first or der, an absolute inflexibility of will and directder, an absolute inferminity of will and directness of energy, a fortitude that nothing could habite, a resolution that no chetacles could deput, a power, the rarest among men, of manntaining a perfect mental equipoise in the greatest exest; a conception from the first of the underlying ideas of the struggle, and a perfect loyalty to nationality and to freedom. He saw, when the guns of Sumiter announced the open ing of war, that not only must the Union be maintained by war, but that sixvery, the inceting cause of the war, must be abolished by it ing cause of the war, must be abolished by it Political generals, like McClellan, who had not grauged the ideas that were to be maintained and worked out through the war, and who were continually trying to arrest their tendency and progress, failed utterly and no wonder Grant, bowever, did not trouble himself about the however, did not trouble himself about the merely political aspects of the struggle. He know that the reballon could be crushed only by hard blows, and that the success of the national armies would signify the triumph of the political ideas appropriate to the Great Republic and necessary to peace with freedom. That these results might not be questioned after the clash of arms had ceased, teneral furnity and provider the treat that the clash of arms had ceased, teneral country and providers that the clash of arms had ceased, teneral country and providers that the clash of arms had ceased, teneral country and the clash of arms had ceased.

from the change of this and change, vehicles for the grant was nade president. It was the natural impulse of the people that called to the giref magnitudy the man who represented the purposes that had beaten down the rebellion, also labed clavery, and conferred the rights of cut zanahly upon a people who had been haid ina bondage. Through the indusors of the pre-ceding administration a spirit had arisen by which the results of the war were being actu ally questioned and to the manifestation of this spirit Grant's election to the presidency was the response of the people who had put down the rebellion, abolished slavery and maintained the maionality of the United States. During his presidency of eight years the results of the war presence of the war to be resulted to the war the war fixed by firmer guarantees and thus through his civil career Grant confirmed the results which his military career had established Thus the great events of his career, military and civil, have been firmly fixed in the history and

The memory of each a man is a national pos-ession, and it will remain so forevermore. What place so fit for his interment as the heart of the greatest city of the republic, where a monument will rise forever to symbolize the his life was devoted? That monument will be an educator of our people through all time Against any future attempt at natuonal disinte-gration it will stand as the most powerful of and to it, as to a shrine of national patriotism, millions of our countrymen will flock, through all generations.

Whether the country would have come at constuly through the Civil War without Grant is merely a speculative question but it is ex-tremely doubtful whether it would. All men see that the qualities he possessed were the in dispensable qualities for military levlership in such an emergency, as the qual ties of I inc + n for political and civil leadership at the same time were similarly indispensable. Both kinds of lands whip was very trying in wast of crisis in a country raied by the conflicts of popular will All the world now admits that Lincoln was just the man for his place and time and yet, had another man been president, with a Grant to command the armies it is probable that the issue of the war would have been the same But without a Grant to command the armies no president could have save; the country It is strictly within bistorical trull; to say that the qualities possessed by Grant are the rarest found among men. Hence It is not likely that if he had not appeared the war would have developed any similar commander. Without Washington it is certain that the Revolution would not have been successful. For that critis he was the one sudispensable man. With out Cromwell the struggle of the partiament against the king would have fulled utterly and o without terant the effort to subdue the great American rebeltion in all probability would have resulted in failure. He alone of the con-nanders of the war could order, direct and sus-tain the terrible fighting necessary to over hrow it. He it was who gave the country victories from the start and he it was who continued them to the end chance may win or lose a single battle but chance never presides over an entire career like this. The might of an army is not solely in numbers. It is in the intelligent force that directs it. Firmness, self reliance, ability to meet greatest responsibilities without being appalled or overwhelmed by them calm ness unchaken by appearance of disaster, and quick intelligence in the adoption of energetic measures to repair t, are qualities far higher than mere headlong courage. Whether, there-fore, the Great Republic, had not General Grant appeared, would now be one and indivisible, may be seriously doubte! Therefore the Ameri can people look upon struct as the man whose life typines be national existence to which bey paid their vows if par others in the lays when that existence was assuled and to which they FALM AND COUNTRY LIBEDIN Some weeks ago the Louisville (our + lo wal remarked incidentally that the son in live grop in Lo isville bud been ball for several seas some back and that the whole availat a sup it had to be imported from the ont-of own is tricks. The remark has been taken up on pair nais all over the country, and a general country is the country and a general country. parison shows that the conditions at Louisville are repeated in nearly every other city of the tountry. The discussion has branched into many interesting directions, among others into a comparison of town bred with country hope. Nobody seems able to account for the almost n variably better outcoile of the latter han the former under the apparent me panety of early

JEL FRESOVIAL DI MOCRACY,

The administration has turned out of the pen-The administration has turned out of the pension agency at Philadelphia a veteran solcier of the Union to make room for a "Jesfandenian democrat," in the person of W. E. H. Davis. Now Davis has a "recent." He is a printer, and his name as such is on the title page of a 400-page book printed in 18 to, containing nothing but renomous abuse and democration of the great patriotic statemen and leaders and ing the art, and region of the real leaders and ing the war, and project of the robel leader, and the princ ples on which the robellion was based. The title page to this volume is as fol the princ ples on which the rebellion was based. Theititle page to this volume is as follows.

Straps from the Pr son Table. By Joe Burbere, leavehant colonel, late. S. A. I cyleston, Pa., WI H. H. Daris, printer, 19-16.

A note appended to be work is as follows. Straps have elapsed since these "straps" were written. Constant travel anne the war and want of opper-unity have presented their publication, jet the writer deems them as appropriate to-day as then, and has no alterations to make in them, regretting naught.

This extract is from its pages.

It is amusing to witness the efforts of the abolitomicis to defy their old master, Atvaham Lincoin, the "jokist." He has brains as has a long. These ignorant fanatics worship man, and that man Abraham. I mooth the pattern of the war who is he? The author of the war who is he? What is the author of all this hellishness that has made a saturatia for the north? You, the mean, whiting, prying, hypecritical, white-livend, negro-dealing, fundical Yanke.

Throughout this hock there is much choice realing of the "Jeffersonian democratic" variety. For instance, Jeff Davis is styled "our belove, chief." Wirz, the author of the Andersonville atrocities, is called "the increased Wirz, the estimated gunst than sinning." Wenderl Phill pe is styled "that dirty dog and faunting, and Stanton is called "beind, a "miscreaul" and a "ghouh." This is the book published by Mr. Pavis. by Mr Davis

by Mr. Davis

But, according to the Philade phia Press, which formishes this information there is more and even worse to be told. Davis, as pension agent, has discharge, his chief deputy, a woundol spidier, and has appointed in his place this ed soider, and has appointed in his piace this Lieutenant-Colonel De Barbiers, 'fate of the confederate states army,' author of the book from which these extracts are taken. This is the man o whom Unin soldiers in the Phila-delphis pension district will hereafter be comdelping penson dearly with interactive be com-pelled to apply for their quarterly allowance, and he will dole out to them the money appro-priated for their benefit by the United States deverment. There is a great uproar phout it among the Union soldiers, who say that Havis and his confederate clonel will "go," or they well know the research.

It is re ated that in several of the states of the experience with the same to dig pits in which to hide when the symptoms of a hard wind he gir to show themselves. This practice, seemingly harmless and ridictions has nevertheless created a wide educing in a Georgia church. A majority of this devent congregation concluded that the construction of these pits were adjusted. that the construction of these pits was a direct intimation to providence that it was no upper tent to care for true believers, and notified their erring brethren that their conduct was an insult to the almighty, and could not be to the aimight, and could not be obstated. The mithority respectfully replied that they were as firm believers in the wise intensions of providence as their more numerous opponents, but which an able-bodied cyclone came along they proposed to 'shim' for those in itse every time. Thus the matter stands, and as each party resolutely chings to its opinion, the church has been rent assurer

It is quite cartain that THE ORECONIAN is the only newspaper in the United States which published the death of General Grant in its regular edition of the morning on which the sad event occurred, in time for the mails. Every one of the subernibers of THE ORE ONIAN, city and country, received the news on the day General Grant died.

The character of The Origonalan shameless has been too long and too well established to render necresary any notice of such contemptible and publish faisebood couned by the bugus Neve to conceal its deep chaptin at the exposure it made of the ottor worthlessness.

The Ammidab Sleek who edited will now have a chance to explain how The Origonalan and the 'an Frincisco (Involute both guessed at the same bour for the death of General Grant to lake place, and also why the Chronacle did not guess in time for its irrs edition.

"It was well understood by everyone who had been paying any attention to the bulletins that the genera's death was near at hand, and that his slay on earth was narrowing down to nimitee," waits the suggish News. Yet in the face of the's information it printed a 2 15 but face of the's information it printed a 2 15 but face of the's information it printed a 2 15 but face of the 'at a consumption,' excuse a smile or incredulity on the part of our printers.' When this community thankfully saw the departure of the brilliant corps of Fastern journal, ists who started the bogus journal, successfully introduced the Eastern style and swindled our citizens out of many thousand dollars, it drews deep sigh of relief and exch impd, "we never shall hook upon their likes agan." Such a lot of Linases and foots it was not supposed could be raked together from the purileus of all the newspaper offices in the Union. But since the bogus journal has been turning tashf melite out through the schitorial columns, writhing under the lashes of truth in the vain effort to explain away its own inarity and angacity, it is plain to be seen that there was a second crop.

: + SOME CIRCUSES.

An 'Old Stager' Gives a Brief History of These Popular En artistaments.

The Advent of the Sirges in America Names That Will Recall to Many an Olf Man his Boyhood Pays.

Although mous performances existed many years before their advent in America, yet it may be sitely claimed that those exhibitions as they are now presented before the subile are peculiarly American institutions. According to the best authornites the first circuis appeared in Newborrport, Massachusetts, May 10, 1810. The managers were two talians by the name of Cayetro. It was a financial futires, and the troupe returned to Europe. Hack, Bulley, of West-hester county, New York first Tatinal, but neither of these left the city. In 1820 a company in New York first Tatinal, but neither of these left the city. In 1820 a company was organized by J. Purday Brown. He formed a company in New York and traveled south with nuch favor and spoil for many years American members of his troupe were Andrew Leves and William Burdaall Levi, Bud-sall and Leves have passed away, and North liarly American institutions. According to the all and Lewes have lassed away, and North died but a ew days ago in his native city, Brooklyn, New York in early eye performers were required to rile vault and tumble. They served regular approximentally and the repulse of their lumness, dompanies were more than the formation of their lumness. served regular appranticeships and were porfect in every line of their luminess. dompanies were small, and their testies were far firm being large. They will come into a fown and play for six to on days, making a procession on horseback and the beand was also mounted—the tent would not hold more than $500—and when it was filled it was thought to be a good business. The advertising bills were small posters, one sheet. They were acked my and when the collect. They were acked my and when the collect. They were acked my and when the collect. They were acked my and of the collects of exhibition. The company only had the one tent, it which the performance took blace. They dressed in the hotel or in some place near the "show, as a freeding room on the ground was a thing not known. The "old" lown and the five side in the hotel or in some place near the "show, and the alreat of the circus in a fown was a smassion to be bogs and girls and "children of a larger growth." AN OLD STAGER.

A SUMMING UP. The General Impressions of an Lowen Briefly Stated

Mentezun a (lowa) Republican.

'Well, what do you think of the northwest,' is the question that has been propounded to us times imponerable since our return. It is a wonderful country and has great things in store for the future. The climate is fine, the soil is productive, and its scenery is grand. Its forests are alexhaustible, its mineral wealth not known. The society is of the very best, and here is not that "putter appearance among the people that one wealth expect to find so far west. Many recolar results." that one would expect to find so far west. Many people wonder why a country with such advantages of kilmate and so great resources is so sparsely settled, but that is easily explained. It has only been a very short time since that country was readily accessable to the people of the "states" of late years the route was over the timen Pariste to San Francisco, and hen by hoa to Pertland. This made it a long and tedious journey But it is not so now know that the country form ranger on the ine of the timen Pariste of Hunting ton where it met the O R & N, and thus formed a direct line from Omaha to Portland. formed a direct line from Omaha to Portland without change of cars. This was only accomplished fast fail, and now passengers can go from Coapell Bluffs to Portland in four days fills will bause a great increase in the population of the northwest. The Morthern Pacific railroad a siso running trains to Portland and from the city the Oregon and Canfortia. Initioad carries passengers to the principal points in Vegon r great valleys, and the Northern Pacific railroad carries passengers to the principal points in Vegon r great valleys, and the Northern Pacific talling and have ignation commany traversethe great rivers. Ocean joints and Puget sound, thus making every point of interest accessible. We think the people of Oregon and Washington territory make a great mistake by wanting only those with ineas to go there. The wealthy sett edown in 1 slowns and cities and invest exest and do but little 15 develop the country. That country needs the andistribus laboring man who is no alread to take off his coat and go the work. In the right was the source of all wealth. Iowa would never have utained to take off his coat and go the work. In the right was the source of all wealth. Iowa would never have utained their resent greatness had it not been for the study pioneer, poor innactially, but rich in indomitable pluck, and gi) yeard manhood—ant these are they who will conver the rich and feltile valleys of the Pacific butth west into happy homes and exentually into 1 h and (respectous communities That country heads him for an interest he has the lab sendence to look out for himself will, they averlise out there for maning this is the rore class that don't have to work, and as king as they devel on such people the rich willeys will remain sparsely settled and thier may estic forcest will continue to rod less with means to settle up the country, and this is the rore class that don't have to work, and the rich passenger of the cast. The other walked in homespun clad;
Her face—it was scarcely fair;
No ribbons, ruffice nor face she had—
And she braided her yellow hair.
But she drupped a coin in a beggar's pain,
she soothed a child with a kiss like balus.
And amiled at the fresh'ning air.

That dainty maiden gathered her lace
From the beggar's touch aside;
She frown'd at the child's amai, tearini face;
She scowled when the wind blew wide;
'Ht union my foilet so complete!'
Yet, ah," said the other, "It blows so sweet".
And they wandered side by side. "Now listen," said she of the yellow hair,
"Do you bear the sheep bells ring?"
But the other answered, "Care—take cure—See that ugly spider swing!"
"It's web is finer than thest lace," Bud Yellow Hair with a sparkting face.
"And its erown is fit for a king!

Then that dainty maid in a ver'd despair Said the marsh had wet her feet: But Yellow Hair, with the happiest air, Oried "Violets—sin, how sweet!" And she plucket them tresh from the moisten'd

And deck'd her girdle, and on did pass, With steps that were always tiesz "The sun's so hot?" on the meadow crest Cried the maid so dainty bred; Afar the forest nodded at rest, And the new oak shoots were red; All tremulous shimmered the heated air; With eyes uplifted—"The world's so fair;" Was all that the other said.

And ever to one the woods were dim,
And the troublous thorns dotained.
There was mud by the river's crystal rim.
And the strange wood berries stained,
While the other harkned the forest's hus
And nored the river's gleam and mish.
In the strength of the spring unchained When questioned, "What have you seen to-day?"
Then the daluty maiden cried,
"Thorns, spiders, a marsh; so hot the way!— I'm torn and swry beside!"
But, Yellow Hair, "was so fresh and sweet!
The tair land blossomed beneath our feet,
And the sky was so blue and wide!"

And oft and oft to myself I say,
O maid with the haughty grace,
You'll so through life in the sellsame way,
With a frown on your handsome face;
But give me the maid that can see alway
The beauty that blessoms for every day,
Where you see never a trace.

AD ASTRA. A STORF

BY HARIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD. (Written for the Sunday Oregonian.)

When the summer sunlight overlay the house on the high hill, embowered in its gigantic greenery and topped by the black screen of pointed pines that touch the burning blue of heaven, its velvet lawns about it, and below the delicately brilliant flowerbeds, its enclosing shrubbery and wall, it seemed a fair place enough for pleasure, and the thought did not go beyond the lightsomeness of the scene.

But when the winter moon shone on the snow-covered roofs, with all their glittering peaks and gubles, around which the tracery of the bare boughs hung like smoke, while the huge dark pines bent here with the rifted silver of many storms and there lifted their frosty spires to the frosty skies, it seemed in all its sharp black and white variance, its hight and icy splendor, a sublimation of the purpose of those low-roofed buildings far beneath, now unsuspected in the shadow, and now belching out a shiftine flame upon the night.

ow, and now belching out a shifte upon the night.

It never reminded them of people living in an atmosphere to which those gardens had seemed heaven itself. No one thought of them as people, indeed, that underground race like the gnomes. If thought of at all, it was simply as one thinks of any mechan-

They were a gay and careless people there upon the hill. there upon the hill. The only one of all who was neither gay nor careless was, perhaps because never entirely well, perhaps cause nothing in her life had any for her. Once a malarial illness had overshadowed her, and never strong again, ber mind, they said, was something morbid, too. To her the bollow world was worthless, we were born only to die—to get through with it all and to die What was the use, then, of being born at all? One generation fled ufter another, as the leaves fall, and to as much purpose. Although she loved them, pose. Although she loved them, and at little children with a shudder, in the midst of their gambols, of when they should wake to wretch. She had no religious fauth; she men and women, as she met them, not believe in love. "Love!" sho she looked at little children with a shudder thinking, in the midst of their gambols, of the time when they should wake to wretchdoubted men and women, as she met them. She did not believe in love. "Love!" she cried, "when no sooner are you dead than your love finds it possible to love another!" seen the wrong side of the pattern," she answered sadly. History was idle, since every swered sady. History was idle, since every new research proved the last a lie. And science was all as it might be if apyone would believe its fairy fable, ... them "It is of no use to talk to Angela," "aid one, "she does not even believe in the lixed stars!". With everything to make her happy, Angela was profoundly unhappy. She had

Angela was profoundly unhappy. She had wealth; but she did not care enough for her weath; but and the fociare enough for her noney even to give it away; of so little worth to her, the fact that it was of worth to others often escaped her. She had home replete with co-tliest beauty, full of gentle glances and sweet voices; but it often seemed to her a prison. She had a beauty that men turned to look at twice, as beauty that men turned to look at twice, as she walked her indifferent way; and she disdunced it. Tall, and rounded like a goddess, of slow and stately movements, her ivory skim, now and again blushing like a fame, burreturning at once to the the a name, but returning at once to the creany tint in which its outlines were chiselled, her hair of bronze gold in loose wayes and heavy masses, her great brown eyes, soft as twilight, as luminous as moons, her full red lips, her teeth like rice-kernuls, the melanched cheen of her wayer lid the melancholy droop of her waxen lid, and the slow smile stealing over all as the dawn the slow smile steading over all as the dawn steads up the sky—it would be difficult to picture lovelier contour and color, difficult as it as to realize that ske cared no more for her beauty than for all the rest of life. Yet the year went by cheerily on the hill for all that. There were riding parties to the though and boating parties to the river, musical mornings, grand evenings, guest to come, and guests to go; and to all therest of the people there, who had not seem the wrong side of the pattern, life seemed well worth living.

Down at the foot of the hill in the forges there was a different sort of life. One must there was a different sort of life. One must have said that the large first there supplied the force that kept all the bubbles damaing at the top. Among the dark figures moving to and fro, like souls of the damned, before to and fro, like souls of the damned, before the leaping flames and showering sparks and lurid light of moulten metal, there was none more stalwart than that of one, a chief among the men by force of character, claaming no other chieftance, nor wishing for it. He had early made up his mind as to the impossibility of rising in the world, as it is called, without capital or cunning; and he had neither. He had resolved, then, to stay where he was. He felt no anger nor hostility on account of it toward the controlling powers of the planet, if it were other than a matter of chance. To his mind it had happened, so he must meet it; if it had happened the other way he would have met it; we must take fate as we find it; it might

The master was the same to him as the man, then; he had no prejudices on the side either of labor or of tapi dices on the side either of labor or of capital; neither seeme of consequence. If he was not an aristocrat, neither was he a radical; and on y in so far as he had not sing knew bothing, believed in nothing, cared for nothing, was he a mibilist. It any of the hill people chanced to look at him, he was just a common fellow, handsome as any swarthy fellow of the forge could be, but still a fellow of the forge. If the, koked the second time, so they would at some bronze image, may be. And yet this fellow of the farge would have given his life for another as Angela, upon the hill there, had once stayed in a burning house to save a servant's body for an existence she herself

At his feet a bed of flowers senting a cloud: of sweetness on the warn, windless night; overhead Lyra sparkled far in fer vio et 'depths; from the river at the foot of the other side of the hill came the midled sound of oars beating in the rowlocks and singing voices of belated lovers on the tide,—happy lovers, yet to what should all their rapturg come at last! There was sanother sound; an opening window, ar typolosing blind; and he saw a white-sawled shape leaning over a balcony, and looking up and out on the night that soured and sweep; away into such gulfs of space that her thought sweeping after it was lost in infinity. I said that he had nothing. That was a mistake; he had his love. I mean his worship. It filled every vacant spot in his being, as the moon-lit tide fills all the bays and reaches of the coast; but it was a ide that never iel. This worship rose with hir and lay down with him, and kept with him and invertible to the forge. It gave him an inner joy that, if it now and then bubbled to his lips, never told to any one the strength of its flery spirit. I e served it with complete self-surender, and asked nothing of it.

Some mea, ear y in the dawn, the sun just teaching the crest of the hill and striking al. Its rime of woven cobwebs into changing jewel-work, ruby, emeralc and topez, lapin and crystal glinting, white long before the second demoniar whistle called the men to work, he came up the slope and walked along beside the stone wall; once or twice he scained it and found himself in the alleys that her feet had frod—her gown had trushed this box border, her hard had plucked the roses from these stems. Once, in the white, moon-lighted midnight, he came again. The heavy blossoms, half atherealized in the ghostly gleam, shed their fragrant rain upon him as he liftee, the branches. But as she lay on her bed that might the thought pheased her, the thought that somewhere out in the unknown a soul like her own soul would be hustening, towards her, towards her who had felt so alone in the universe, and had so many times shivered with the awful solitarness. Then there must be an unknown after all, as see had half hoped so many times as she had felt sure that night when Lyra shone heaven over heaven above her. And she felt usleep with a smile upon her face that it was not used to wer; and the moonlight came and swam across her bed, and lay upon her face and glorified it.

THE ANBER FISHERMAN. ADAPTED FOR THE OREJONIAN FROM THE

DANISH OF CARIT ETLAR. BY MRS. BURTON N. HABRISON. Written for the Sunday Oregonian.

On an isle and separated from the main-land of Denmark by the fords of Etarning and Stadil, once dwe't a powerful ruler named Sivert Ring, who exercised over everybody residing within his dominions a despotic rule. All that was cast by the sea upon his shores, whether goods or floating wreck, belonged to Sivart Ring, and it was strictly forbidden to every one to lay a hand revenue coming to him from the vigilant patrol of his coast was derived from the quantities of amber washed ashore, and woe betide the man who should attempt to remove a particle of that precious substance. At every ebb, after a southwest wind, it was Ring's custom to send his men out to overhaul the sand ridges, and they often carried home a rich burden of the pale vellow fossil resin. Sometimes the harvest was less satisfactory, and Ring bade them keep herce watch upon any one whom they might suspect of hovering near the spot with intent to pilfer.

Not far from the sand-bank lived a fisherman, who, coming into the neighborhood a few years before a poor man, had accumulated considerable property in a short time. Popular tracition had it that he had found a treasure buried in the sand by some sea king of old. Others suspected him of being in league with the devil, and in consequence Sam, for such was the fisherman's name, was rather a numed than sought in the limited society of the island. Little cared he, however, living confortably in his cottage in company with his pretty daughter, Maria, who kept the house. Once, indeed, ne, nowever, aving contraining in instead, sam had fallen uncer the keen scrutiny of Ring, who, sending for him, asked many questions about his mode of life, all of which were apparently answered to the ruler's satisfaction since he let the fisherman go without further molestation.

One winter's evening when the wind blew strong in shore, the inhabitants of Holmsland gathered upon the kitt, or sandbank to watch the motements of a strange vessel, laboring amid giant waves, from which it seemed hardly possible she could emerge unharmed. Night closed in and the watchers separated, sure that on the morrow they would find a wreck upon their coast. At midnight, teers came a knick at the door of Sam, the fisherman, and a handsome young mun presented himself, asking shelter on the ground that he was the only one who had escaped from the doomed ship, which had sunk with all the rest of her crew. Sam gave him clothes, and fool and a bed, taking all possible care of the fritunate survivor. The young man whose mane was Jonas, became in this way a member of Sam's family, remaining with him until the spring, and in the course of time forming a warm attacament for Maria, who returned his love to her. Jonas told the fisherman of this latter 'act, Sam answered him that while he had a right to expect a richer son-in-law, he could hardly find one more to his taste. So the young couple were bethrothed, and had already begun to talk about their wedding, when one evening. Sam called Jonas to his side.

"Listen to me, my dear," he said "Since you are so soor to be my son-in-law it is but proper that I should inform you a little about my proper y. If you would like to go out with me to-night I will take you into my confidence."

She told this to her father, who laughed at it for a gul's fame, but many a tear was dropped in secret by the bride-elect.

One evening, determined to ask her lover frankly what caused his altered manner, Maria went to meet him on his return from Holmsland, whither he had gone to spend the day. Absorbed in thought, she did not observe how furshe had walked, ontil sitting down to rest behind a sand-dune, she was

No whining, now, but go back to the cottage, undiffering that a light in the window that looks foward the road, in token that all is quie, in the bouse."

Great drops of agony stood quon Maria's brow as she listened to this disclosure. To have been betrayed by her love was far more terrible than the prospect of actual danger to herself. Scarcely believing her cars, she staggered to her feet, and selecting it by path leading to her home by a shorter way than she bad cone, sped litts a dart along it. To reach the cottage and warm her father before Joras could return was now her one desire. Beyond that all was dark.

I recall an instance of Secretary Calhoun stopping his currisp as the way to a conference a; the presiscations to pay fifty cents which he had becrewed the day before to give an old began woman. Webster was no testotale, but he knew that I was, and I have a vivid recollection of one night, about forty years ago, when Webster, after delivering on eloquent speech in the Old Fellows' hal, in favor of Irish independence, came to me, and, slapping me on the back, cordially invited me to go to his house and drunk some water with him. But the fuelest memory which I cherish is that nearly the last writing done done by Webster was an inscription on a printed copy of the great speech which he delivered before the Historical society in New; York. Written for the Sunday Oregonia : SPECULATION. hrs. Whipple and Mr Betts were sitting on the plazza at Gibson's, whon a carriage brought same passengers from the New York morning thin. There alighted a gentleman and July followed by a maid

"Goodness" said Mrs Whipple, "here comes Philip Stevenson and he has actually brought philip stevensor and ne has actually brought be wile to Gibson's "

"Th? Ah yes, yes, 'answered Mr Betts, caning his neck after the three persons as they proved and entered the hotel, "that must be the wife—the heroine of the mysterious ma ringo—not a word known about it at the cinb—not a with word known about it at the chib—not a wind beyond the bare printed announcement. Here whipple was a stout widow of oi, pasty at a complexion, juvenile as to the nut-brown one of a dainty "front," and given to a little grainfaint, peering action of the haid and see, which not even the dazzle of a percential sails could render quite agreeable. She was popular in New York society, partly through redditions regarding the importance of the decreased Whipple, but mainly though an indominable energy in attending dinners, buils, then term and races, whereby she became a valuable frampeter for those who made and loved a dis ges and races, whereby she became a valuable bumpeter for those who made and loved a die play, and a gazette of fashion for social strugges. She was the sort of person that "loves company" and must be "on the go," but she had many amiable traits, was fond of her friends, busy in charites, familiar with many greatlent precepts, often concutted a genteely admeted conscience and believed in its infall!

"Why," she exclaimed, "a month ago I special a newspaper and there I read "sleven sa-Barnwell—On June 10th, Philip Streuson Edith Barnwell." No notice to has francis, not a call paid since he came home from Europe in April, not a whisper of an engagement no reference to the bride's family or parentage Barnwell." Humph' Now who on earth is helith Barnwell."

Manywell Handy acts, which is the solemuly "Mobody, or worse—too much of a some-tody," returned Mrs Whipple "A man in Phil Stermson's position owes it to society to give an account of the woman he marries Edith Farmwell, indeed! She's one of those grambling wenter picked up at Monte Carlo, Tattleton Pames axes.

wemen picked up at Monte Carlo, Tattieton Prime says
"Hey? what? Beg pardon didn scinebody take my name in vain asked a bright, sait, light-built young min who was just passing and stopped short, bringing his heels togener with a click What's up? what's the rw? who calls so loud? ch? Hello come on let's have it." and through his rapid, jerking special he kept tessing up and catching a tennis bell.

"You reported that Stovenson married a waman whom he med at the tables at Monte Carle," said Mrs Whipple.
"Did I" answered the rapu young man, with a hirch after the ball, which had come down out of reach "Did I? Shouldn't won der if"—nother lurch—"If he had I knew a fallow just as rich and just as good looking as Phil who made such a match—sturning wo man the Derby "You certainly told the story of Phil Steven

"You certainly told the story of Phil Steven son?" Mrs. Whipple masted.

"Maybe I did Very like!" Whoo?' come back? as the brill went askew again. "Have to keep up conversation—keep the ball rolling.—th? See? The ball, th? Pretty good? Yind Mr. Prime, who was considered by his friends very hreby and amusing, laughed, at the aptraces of his ilinativation and made another ski ifful catch. "Why everylody asks has about the catch the whole the states. On the control and the states. On the prime, do tall us all about it?" This list was given in a control fat settle.

Philip has just arrived here, Mrs. Whippile

"Philip has just arrived here," Mrs. Whippide "Philip has just arrived here," Mrs. Whippide informed him, "and with his wise." "What? Be the World his wise." "What? Be the World his wise of the Taty Prime. "Ah" sighed Mrs. Whippide thow should one at his case like this. Tutty certainly did seak of Monte Carlo in connection with Philip is wife, and yet, with my high moon, I can tailord, you know, to—to—to be uncharitable." Mrs. Whypie had her own delicate plasses for moral wolkens. "Oh, Mr Betts," and she shoot her tead impressively, we must never, never forget believe had things, hopeth all things," and hen, again, "thinketh no evil" Dear, lear the Extremon estate was appraised at the millions and Philip inherited the whole hitt." "Carl' we," suggested Mri, Betts, emphasing his words by pointing at hirs. Whippie with his delicate indde finger, "can't we observe the—sheal" the lady carefully, and hien act according to a prudent judgment." "Oh, I suppess we can," they widow returned perishly, "but, dear me, we all went to that bard French countees" recept one, we didn't cick at the moralities then, and she was, as it greed—well, no matter what. Come, Mr Betts exasively "there Betis, you were dangling after that countess, you can't dany ut."

"About" began Mr. Betts evasively "there was circumstances that—about"?

"Bah! Nonsense! She was the fashion, and you like to be in the swim Dun't counterfeit in ma." For these two, having weaknesses in common, loved to stab at each other now and than. Being savage against certain faut is when we see them in other people seems almost like autonement for having them durestives.

"Ah what a world this is" Mrs. Whipple ejaculated, "Sometimes I wish myself atready over the dark river, and in that happier and where social commit cations are not known. Then

An lateresting Decoment Written for Dector Boughas on July 2

Mr. McGreege, July 25 — White in conversation to-day with a correspondent of the Associated Press, Dr Doughas read the following remarkable document, written by Grant in Pouglas' presence, July 2.

I sak you not to show this to anyone, unless the physicians you consult with, until the end. Particularly I want it kept from my family. If known to one man the papers will get it, and the fifth family) will get it. It would only distress them all beyond endurance to know it, and by refex would distress me. I have not changed my mind materially since I wrote you before in the same strain. Now, however, I know that I gain strength some days, but when I do go teak it is beyond where I started to improve. I think the changes are very decoming in favor of you being able to keep me sites until the change of weather towards winter. WASHINGTON PEOPIE STILL COMPLAIM

WASHINGTON, July 23—Continued expressions of disapproval and disappointment at the selection of New Lork as the burnal piece of General Grant is heard from officials in svery grade, and citizens generally in Washington. Said one of the most prominent officials in the new administration to-day "The burla! of General Grant at New Lork, with the ceremolies preceding it, will make it more of a state than a national affair. His body is .0 ite in state in Albany and New Lork City. It dought to be placed in state in New Lork, Philadelphia and Washington, and then be furied here, beside the soldiers who fought with Lim. Under the present arrangement the army can do nothing more than 1 would do should it be called upon to assist in the borial of any other prominent general. The called the soldiers who fought with Lim. Under the present arrangement for any other prominent general. The called upon to assist in the borial of any other prominent general. The should be called upon to assist in the borial of any other prominent general.

Citizens express sentiments similar to the above indicated. They admit, however, that if it were the wish of General Grant, or if the family have a decided preference that the Jurial take place in New York, further controversy is precluded.

This selection of Central park as the place of burial railler than other public reservations in New York is also specially criticised here, and the suggestion is made that the courtre of Union square, for instance, would be a more filting place for interment of the dead here's remains, and the erection of a noble monument to commemorate our gratitude.

A general order in the name of Sherilan has to-day been issued to General Hanoock, Cirecting him to take charge of the military cersmonies connected with the funeral.
